Essay Writing in 10 Words

1. Brief

Take time to fully understand the brief you have been given. Read it several times and put it into your own words before starting. Ensure your essay states the brief in your introduction, addresses it in your main body and answers it in your conclusion. This will enable your reader to know exactly what your essay is about, how you have addressed it and what you have concluded on this subject.

If your brief has several parts to it, divide your word count between them according to their relative importance and structure your main body so that you address each part in turn.

2. Evidence

Collect evidence on your subject. Every claim you make in your essay should be backed up by evidence. Never air your beliefs or opinions without evidence unless specifically asked to in your brief. Ensure the quality and relevance of your evidence is as high as possible. Organise your evidence conceptually (e.g. use a mind map). Collect about twice as much evidence as you are planning to use.

Prioritise the importance of your evidence, e.g. the top 10%, the next 40%, and the other 50%. Spend about the same number of words discussing the top 10% as the next 40% but don't refer to the other 50%. Where possible, cite your top 10% in more depth in one place rather than using several short citations so that your reader can clearly see you are prioritising this evidence.

Avoid regurgitating evidence by evaluating it: don't ignore conflicting evidence and come to a personal view based on the evidence with an appropriate degree of confidence for each area you cover.

3. Paragraph

Write your essay in paragraphs. Separate each paragraph with a blank line. The average paragraph length should be about 125 words and 4 or more sentences. Paragraphs are the basic building blocks of essays. If you can write good paragraphs you are more than half way to becoming a good essay writer. Short paragraphs indicate ideas which are not fully developed.

4. Topic

Each of your paragraphs should introduce, develop and conclude a single topic. Your reader should clearly be able to understand what each paragraph is about by reading the first one or two sentences. If not, then divide your paragraphs up to avoid rambling. Successive paragraph topics should flow in a logical sequence.

5. Point

Each paragraph should make one main point (claim backed up by evidence). When introducing and describing evidence your points should generally come at the beginning of your paragraphs but when discussing ideas in more depth they should generally come at the end. Your points are very important as they are the essence of what you are trying to say to your reader.

6. Introduction

Start your essay with an introduction. Use about 10% of your word count. Your introduction should contain three stages:

- Territory – establish the wider context of your essay subject by making some simple, generally accepted observations which a non-specialist reader can understand. For longer essays, then start to focus towards the essay subject.
- Niche – explain what your essay is about and why it is important/interesting
- Occupy – explain how you are going to address the subject of your essay in your main body (this stage also signals to your reader that your introduction is ending and your main body is about to start). This is saying what you are going to say.
